Reading Paul's letter to the Romans

The Apostle Paul's letter to the Romans has been described as a 'masterpiece'. Each chapter is packed full of life-giving words that encourage and inspire us. It is also, in places, complex, which can, despite this letter being for everyone (as it was back when it was first written, and still is now) leave the reader scratching their head a bit.

Paul was writing to a church that he had not planted (Peter had planted the church in Rome), so his relationship with them was slightly different. The church had been through some significant changes in the years prior to the letter being written which were linked to a change in the emperor. The emperor Claudius was highly suspicious of the Jewish religion so had basically banished the Jews from the city. This meant that the church in Rome was mainly composed of non-Jewish converts. Claudius was succeeded by Nero, who was more sympathetic to the Jewish religion and allowed them back into the city, and subsequently the church had a mix of Jewish and non-Jewish converts. With this came some different ideas on what the practices of the church should be, particularly in how they related to the Law. Paul, carefully, but clearly, seeks to clarify some of these differences of practice and theology, and set the church on a unified path. Paul also wanted to use the church in Rome as a launchpad for his evangelistic endeavours into the western

Tom Wright has written two small commentaries on the letter to the Romans as part of his '... for everyone' series. You may find them helpful as you read through the letter. He says in the introduction that 'Romans is all about the God who, as Paul says, unveils His Grace and Power through the good news about Jesus.' He goes on to say that this 'grace and power' is available to all who would believe.

The Bible Project has put together two films giving an overview of the letter, which you may find helpful to watch before you embark on the reading plan - https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=ej_6dVdJSIU

The passages each day are, on the whole, relatively short (they match the sections and have the same headings that are in Tom Wright's commentaries). You may want to find a comfortable place free from distractions to read. Start by inviting the Holy Spirit to speak to you through the passage. Read through the passage slowly and attentively, maybe read it a few times. Be aware of any particular words or phrases that you may be drawn to as you read – dwell on them, again, ask the Holy Spirit what He wants to reveal to you. Talk to God about what is stirring in you through the passage, but don't worry if nothing seems to happen – God is still there and is enjoying being with you.
